The creators of this music system assert that music when played to an unborn child could offer the building blocks for imminent musical aptitude and promote cerebral growth.

The new-fangled contrivance that is to be connected to an MPEG3 player is believed to facilitate mother-baby in sharing the sensorial and emotional feeling of forming a close personal bond via sounds and musical notes.

The inventor, Oren Oz, fathering two kids, came up with the idea of this device after having seen his pregnant wife struggling at playing music for the unborn child. Oren sensed the immense aggravation his wife went through struggling to spot a comfy pose that additionally permitted the speakers to stay in a fixed position. When trying to play music for the foetus, it is nearly unworkable for the mother to be movable while be able to have the utmost litheness to select the track of choice.

None of the existent market obtainable products appear suited in their devise, tools and handiness. The creation of Ritmo aims at safe sound delivery within the uterus, taking into consideration the exceptional aural surroundings of the uterus.

The device created by Oz and his group from Nuvo Group, planned it with both maternal and foetal placation into consideration.

The duo sets of speakers are implanted in an elastic cloth padding fitting around the pregnant bulge and could be donned underneath clothes.

The Ritmo system is connected to an MPEG3 player and the sound emanated are divided 3 ways – duo range of speakers and headphones for the to-be momma to connect in.

The Ritmo system is capable of creating an amphitheatre like effect in the uterus and deliver completely safe sounds to the foetus irrespective of its placement in the womb. The explanation for the functioning of this system is the tangible control of the sound production to the speaker range.

The Ritmo pregnancy sound system priced at eighty pounds is a fine, incomparable way for both mother and baby to bond via musical sounds and voices.
