The Doctor's Holdall: Ritmo advanced pregnancy sound system

Everyone seems to have an iPod these days, except the unborn. That's all about to change with the Ritmo, a set of speakers for use by pregnant mothers. Marketed as a "prenatal music player", Ritmo straps around your bump and serenades your foetus through stereo speakers woven into its elastic sling. It works just as well with phone calls, too.

Research suggests that auditory stimuli help your child to develop, so this sound system could give the little angel a head start. It's probably advisable to give the playlist a judicious edit first, though, before blasting nine months of Michael Bublé and Susan Boyle at the poor soon-to-be nipper.
